Passage

The cockroach has learnt more about survival than any other creature. He can live any where , from the middle of the Sahara desert to the kitchens in freezing Labrador. The cockroach's ability to survive comes from his ability to eat any thing. His tastes in food include everything from flower buds to shoes. He eats his own cast-off skin and ifthere is nothing else, dines on the eggs of his own species. He can live for a month with out any food or water. Nearly all cockroaches have wings. Even house hold species can fly when other means of escape fail-butf they mainly depend on six, powerful, short legs. What is most remarkable about the cockroach are his two antennae. They help him fell his way in the dark. They contain his sense of smell, detect food and water and when he is interested in a lady cockroach, he uses them to stroke her affectionately.
